3. Created by gifted writer Molly Smith Metzler (whose credits include Orange Is the New Black and Shameless), the script was inspired by author Stephanie Land's best-selling memoir, Maid: Hard Work, Low Pay, and a Mother's Will to Survive, a true depiction of an escape from torment and the ability to survive by becoming a maid. (See The New Social Worker's book review of Land's real-life memoir.)

Newly released and broadly viewed, the 10-segment Netflix mini-series offers testimony that well-acted drama educates and informs. By showing a mom and daughter viewers care about and relate to, the series' focus is domestic violence intensified by poverty, untrustworthy parenting—and what clients with no resources face in an endlessly flawed, contradictory, grossly inadequate, and impersonal, bureaucratic system. This portrayal offers viewers insight into the pain and fear of those abused, as well as the maddening administrative quagmire of the so-called “helping system.”
