7. Build Your Accountability and Mentorship Networks.

This was valuable to me when I was attaining my degrees. I had accountability partners within my cohort and at least one person, more of a mentor, who was a year ahead of me. Having both accountability partners and mentors may help you maintain your motivation as you exchange thoughts pertaining to hopes, goals, and challenges. They also support you in staying on track with assignment deadlines and other academic goals.

Overall, be intentional in planning how often you will meet and by what virtual method. Always show up with ideas for discussion, and even follow up on previous meeting topics. For example, did you all follow through with goals set during the previous meeting? If not, what blocked you from achieving your goals? What could have been done differently? Be sure to make your accountability sessions productive.
