3. 8. Save. Save. Save.

After each semester, store your documents, study materials, and assignments in a repository such as a binder, shared drive, or other cloud application. Remember that your learning management system (e.g., Canvas, Blackboard, Moodle) may limit your access time, and close when the semester is complete. After that, neither you nor the course instructor will have access to the materials you have submitted. Remember, courses are designed to build upon each other over the semesters—therefore, take your previous learning with you. Your class notes and insights from previous courses will be helpful as you transition to the next semester.

Over the past few years, there has been an increase in distance education learning across the globe. Whether you are new to distance learning or seasoned in navigating online courses, maintaining motivation and decreasing the sense of isolation can be challenging. Take steps to be inspired and organized as you enter each semester. Overall, be intentional about putting these eight tips into action and increasing your opportunities for success in the world of distance education learning.
