3. There are various script flaws in the depiction of Paula, whose abuse by Alex's estranged dad, Hank (Billy Burke), traumatized the young Alex. We learn that after Paula left him when Alex was young, she continued to be used and manipulated by dishonest, disreputable men. Yet, she has stayed free of physical disease—a nearly impossible feat—and her beauty remains intact.

Although Paula has brief bursts of affection for her daughter and granddaughter, her paranoia overtakes her. She lashes out cruelly at Alex, and any sustained contact is impossible. To heal from parental abuse and rejection—to no longer fear standing alone, to no longer believe that abuse offers “something, someone, rather than the hell of nothing, no one” (a depiction my clients repeat again and again), Alex will need far more than the time-limited support and insights of a highly competent, devoted social worker and a few group therapy sessions.
