2. LE FASI DEL PROCEDIMENTO METODOLOGICO:6) Valutazione dei risultati

3.

Nor does Melendez understand a persistence in using “universal principles” without taking cultural and other differences into account. “We have always had the notion of universal psychological principles,” he says, “but even these theories were developed from people who are race-, gender-, and class-specific. Even if there are universal principles, they’re interpreted and mediated by people’s experience. We are a race-conscious society. We’ve spent a lot of time denying it despite our history—genocide against the Native American, slavery, the tremendous reaction to Affirmative Action, and xenophobia in the current immigration debate. We’re polarized into black and white.”
