3. SPOILER ALERT (The remainder of this review reveals key plot details.)

Despite the strengths stated above, my head reeled watching Maid. Although mesmerizing in script and its depiction, the series presents an unrealistic portrayal of the brutal, life-threatening epidemic of domestic violence, where “72% of all murder-suicides involve an intimate partner; 94% of the victims of these murder suicides are female,” according to the National Coalition Against Domestic Violence (NCADV). Further, of the 1 in 15 children exposed to this travesty, 90% are eye witnesses.

I appreciate that viewers will be appalled by the vivid trauma seen in Maid and uplifted by its resolve. And surely, I well know that those imprisoned by domestic violators can set themselves free. I write to emphasize, however, that as professionals in discussing this series, we have the responsibility to draw attention to realistic data, experience, and expectation.

Alex’s self-destructive decisions, though painful to view, are far less than those of Paula, Alex’s bipolar mom, played by the stunning Andie MacDowell, Qualley’s mother in real life. (In certain shots, their resemblance is uncanny.) Alex is devoted to Paula, an artist who sees her mania as free spirit and refuses medication.
