Social work schools are increasingly incorporating courses on racism into the curriculum or revising existing ones. The University of Washington offers the course "Poverty and Inequality: An Analysis of Poverty and Inequality in the United States," including socioeconomic dimensions of stratification, including race, ethnicity, class, gender, immigration status, disability, age, sexual orientation, and family structure. Another course is "Social Work for Social Justice: Developing a Personal-Professional Stance." It uses critically self-reflective, experiential, and dialogue learning processes to engage students to explore personal meaning systems and narratives in the context of professional values of social justice, multiculturalism, empowerment, and globalization.
